

MISS JAMA'S MIGRATION STORY

Miss Jama had an exciting life in Somalia, before the war started.

Before the war broke she had her family around her. She had just only brother but not sister.

When the war started she decided to escape to keep safe. She left and went to Ethiopia and then Uganda. She wanted to come to England for a better life. Her family and her saved the money to pay for the aeroplane.

When she arrived in England she was afraid of the people because she didn't know how to speak English. She saw an escalator for the first time and she didn't know what it was so she scared to go on it. Before she came to England her mum told her she would pray for her and ask Allah to help her. At the airport she saw some automatic doors open by themselves and she thought it was Allah helping her. She was really surprised to see ladies in England wearing very little clothes.

She was a refugee so she had to ask the government if she could stay in the country. It took one year for them to decide and then they said yes. Mrs Jama didn't know English so she started on Esol class, after she finished Essol's class then she when on college, she was scared and worried at the beginning and was hard for her to settle in England. But later on she liked the country because of the better education and safe life. She was scared and worried about her family because she left her family. She misses her brother, parents and the fresh food in Somalia
